MORE ABOUT THE JEFFERSON 510

For waterfowl enthusiasts, the farm sits in one of Arkansas' best flyways, an area long recognized for holding and attracting large numbers of wintering ducks. The combination of irrigated crop ground, CRP acreage, natural treelines, and hardwood timber creates diverse and highly effective hunting setups. With the addition of one levee along the west side of the property, approximately 50 acres of green tree timber could be flooded in a short period of time with minimal work, significantly enhancing the already strong waterfowl potential. The existing wells and water-control infrastructure make this improvement both practical and efficient.

Deer hunting across the 227± acres of mature and middle-aged hardwoods is equally impressive. The timber provides strong mast production, natural travel corridors, and excellent bedding cover, while the surrounding agricultural acreage supplies a consistent and abundant food source. The layout supports multiple stand locations and offers substantial opportunity for continued whitetail management and trophy-quality deer.

In addition to ducks and deer, the agricultural fields and open ground provide incredible dove hunting opportunities. The combination of row crop acreage, field edges, and nearby water sources naturally attracts doves, creating exciting early-season hunts and adding another layer of recreational value.
